MANUSCRIPTS AND PRINTED EDITIONS OF MARCO POLO'S TRAVELS

1

Manuscripts and early editions of the Book of Marro Polo can for the most part be classified into three groups, i. c., A. B and C: these groups may be again divided into a number of sub-groups. Group A belong the famous Franco-Italian text in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris (MS. français 1116) and other numerous MSS. The most representative text of this group, fr. 1110, has been known as the Geographic Text since it was published literation in 1824 by the Société de Géographie in Vol. I of the Remeil de Voyage et de Mémoires, Group B is represented by Ramusio's composite Italian version published in 1559 at Venice in the second volume of Dalle Navigationi et Viaggi, while Group C contains the MS. in the Ambrosisma Library at Milan and the MS, discovered by Percival David in the Chapter Library of the Cathedral at Toledo on 7 December 1932, and published in 1938 at London under the joint editorship of A. C. Moule and Paul Pelliot as the second volume of Marco Polo: the Description of the World,

Before proceeding to consider the textual tradition of the Polian texts, let us give a plance at the circumstances in which the Back of Money Polo was composed. After 25 years' travel in the East Marco Polo with his father Nicolo and his uncle Maffeet arrived at his native city of Venice some time in the year 1295. Marco soon acquired great fame among his fellow citizens who were so fascinated by his charming and gracious personality that they came every day to visit and converse with him, and to ask him matters concerning Cathay, the Great Khan Chipangu. etc. Probably some time in the following year, Marco Polo was taken prisoner by the Genoese in an unrecorded encounter between the armed galleys of Venice and Genea. While in prison at Genoa Marco became a great favorite with his fellow prisoners, and even with the jailors because of his tales of the wonders and wealth of the East, and of his adventures. The jailors and released prisoners in turn would speak of him and his story to their relatives and friends, and so the name of "Marco Milioni" - as he was nicknamed because of his prodigal use of this word in his narrativesbecame known throughour the great medieval city of Genes. Asked or forced to tell his story over and over again even the loquacious Venetian adventurer wearied of repeating it, and took advantage of the opportunity affered him through his acquaintance with one Rustichello of Pisa, a professional romance-writer, who had also been taken prisoner in a battle between Genoa and Pisa, to put his tale down in writing Little is known of this Rustichello. There are several MSS, of Arthurian romances in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, which were written by one Rusticien de Pise, Painstaking comparison of these Arthurian romances with the Franco-Italian text, fr. 1116, by L. F. Benedetto (1) has established that this Rusticien de Pise was no other than Rustichello. In his monumental work Benedetto reveals that not only the style but phrases, sentences, and, in some cases, entire paragraphs are almost identical in Rusticien's romances and in fr. 1116.

When Marco Polo decided to make Rustichello write down his story, he requested his father at Venice to send him his notes and memoranda made during his prolonged sojourn in the East. Ramusio refers to these in his Preface to Vol. II of Delle Navigation of Viaggi but some scholars considered that the passage had been invented by Ramusio himself. There is proof, however, that Marco had recourse to some kind of aide-mémoires, since it must have been quite impossible for any one, however great was his power of memory, to reproduce such exact data on various peoples and their customs, climates, products, political and military events, etc., as we find in the Book of Marco Palo solely from memory after a period of nearly thirty years.

When the notes finally arrived from Venice. Marco started to tell his repeatedly-told stary, perhaps in its proper order to the professional romance-writer, Rustichello of Pisa, and probably to others as the prison was crowded with men like himself and Rustichello from various parts of the Mediterranean littoral, Rustichello's job seems to have been that of arranging the various portions of the story in order, to knit the different chapters and divisions into a suitable form for a book, to insert opening and closing lines, etc., and, finally, to translate Marco's Venetian dialect into Franco-Italian commonly used for such popular works.

After comparing numerous passages of fr. 1116 with those of Rustichello's other romances. Benedetto has come to the conclusion that Rustichello produced the ancestor of fr. 1116 and its related MSS, based upon a stduy of the notes supplied him by Marco Polo as well as his suggestions. Rustichello's version of the Trucks of Monie Pole was a product of joint authorabip, but Benedetto argues that even fr. 1116 must represent only a later copy of the original of the Polo-Rustichello compilation. N. M. Penzer (2) suggests: "One of the mimerous Genoese, who without the slightest doubt did visit Polo, became very friendly with him, and helped in the editing of the work, in addition to Rustichelio." If Penzer's suggestion be acceptable. can it not also be further supposed that there were other persons who wrote down what Marco had told them in the Genoese prison or in Venice before and! or after his imprisonment? It would be, therefore. too much to assume that Rustichello's was the only version, directly based on Marco's story and his notes. and that all the other versions, extant or lost, descended from this sole ancestor. Is there mything that prevents us to assume, on the contrary, that several different versions were made at first hand from Marco's own story or his notes at the same time as, or earlier or later than, Rustichello's version?

Most students of the Polian texts seem to have taken it for granted that there was only one lost original i. e. Rustichello's version, and all subsequent texts handed down to us are as descendants; direct or indirect. In other words they assume that all Polian texts are either copies, faithful or otherwise.

or recensions or translations, full or abridged, of this now lest original (0). A. C. Moule's (0) attempt to reconstruct 0 by means of a composite text seems to be based on the same assumption. This theory, however, seems to me open to question for the reason just mentioned.

Let us now turn to other sub-groups of F as Benedetto refers to as fr. 1116 and its related MSS. First comes the Grégoire version or FG as Benedetto calls it, who has added another ten MSS, to the five known by Henry Yule (a). Yule's famous English translation was based on Pauthier's translation (a) which is in turn based on one of this sub-group.

Secondly, there is the Tuscan recension which was translated into Tuscan from a Franco-Italian version at the beginning of the fourteenth century. This Tuscan sub-group (TA) was published by the Sociéte de Géographic in the same volume as fr. 1116, and formed the basis of H. Murray's English translation (a) published in 1824.

Next comes the Venetian recension which was the most widely distributed of all Polian texts and contains over eighty MSS. The great fame the Venetian version achieved was due to the popular belief that this version was nothing less than Marco's original. This popular, but erroneous, opinion originated from the enlogistic manner in which Pipino referred to his source. Francesco Pipino of Bologna, a Dominican friar, is known also as the author of several Latin translations of medieval French books. This Latin version by Pipino was made from a Venetian text, probably in the later years of Marco's life, but there seems no ground for believing that it was executed with Marco's cognizance and retouched by himself as some scholars used to believe. The first printed edition of Pipino's Latin version appeared about 1485 not long after the invention of printing. This is the third earliest printed edition of the Book of Marco Polo, the first being the German edition published at Nurenberg in 1477, and the second a reproduction of the same at Augsburg in 1481.

According to Libri in "The finest of all the results due to the influence of Marco Polo is that of having stirred Columbus to the discovery of the New World. Columbus, jealous of Polo's laurels, spent his life in preparing means to get to that Zipangu of which the Venetian traveller had told such great things." It is of interest to note that a copy of Pipino's Latin edition of 1485 lies in the Biblioteca Colombina at Seville. How deep was the interest taken by Columbus in Marco Polo's travels is indicated by the copious marginal annotation found in the copy kept in the Colombins. The margines of the following folios contain the autographical notes of the great navigator (a).

The present facsimile is made from another original copy of this first Latin edition of 1485, which is preserved in the Toyo Bunko (Oriental Library), formerly the Morrison Library and now a branch library of the National Diet Library at Tokyo. This edition, a rare specimen of incunabula, was printed at Antwerp about 1485 together with the travels of Mandeville and Ludolphe as is revealed from the examination of the copy in the Sunderland Library, which is complete and contains the three works.

It is also interesting to note in passing that an Elizabethan translation (n) published in 1579 in based on one of the ramified versions of the Venetian resension. This earliest English translation of the Book of Marco Polo was made by John Frampton from the Spanish (Castilian) version of Rodrige Fernández de Santsella y Córdoba. Santsella's Castilian translation is based on a MS, which is now preserved in the Biblioteca del Seminario of Seville. This MS, and Santsella's Spanish, hence Frampton's English, versions are important in the sense that they reveal the prototype which served as the source of Pipino's Jamous Latin version.

A curious complication of translation and retranslation arose from the situation in the Middle Ages where effective publication was absent. As we have seen above the first Latin edition was published in 1485, and a second Latin edition was published at Basie in 1532 in the Nomes orbis regionum as insularum reteribia incomitarum, edited by Simon Grynneus, but actually compiled by Jean Huttichius. This Latin version, while being different from Pipino's, is clearly based on it: Text of Grynacus' Latin edition is very corrupt, and has been regarded as a retranslation from the Portuguese translation of 1502. Andreas Maller of Greiffenhagen reprinted the Latin of Grynaeus in 1671, and Bergeron's Marco Polo in his Voyages fait principalement en Asic published in 1735, is based on Maller's edition at sixth hand. Here we see following curious and vicious circle of translation: French-Italian-Latin-

Portugues-Latin-French.

Leaving Group A, we will now pass on to a brief account of group B. This group is represented by Ramusio's recension and some Venetian MSS. Ramusio's famous Italian edition of which there is no manuscript appeared in the second volume of Delle Navigationi et Viaggi, etc., in 1859, printed by the Venetian printers Giunti, who had entrusted the editorship of this collection of travels and voyages in three volumes to a learned Venetian Giovanni-Battista Rannaio, Ramusio took the Latin version by Pipinn as the basis for his translation with additions from other sources among which Z is the most important to which we shall return shortly. There are, however, unique passages found only in Russial's version and not found in Group A or in Group C. Though Ramusio's version is a translated composite text, it occupies a unique place in the realm of Polism texts. When Maraden (10) undertook his famous translation of Marro Poly, he chose Ramusio's Italian version as the basis for his translation. Marsden's is, therefore, a translation of a translated compilation from several sources. Some scholars among whom there was Henry Yule were critical of Maraden's choice of Ramusio's version. But recent research has tended gradually to establish the value and importance of Ramusio's version.

IV

Lastly let us turn to Group C. The history of the discovery of Z is unusually interesting. A Latin copy of a Polish text was found by Benedetto in the Ambresiana Library at Milau. It is taken from an early Latin text in the library of Cardinal Francisco Xavier de Zeiada at Rome, which was copied in 1795 by the Abate Touldo, and the original is mentioned by Baldelli-Boni to have been left by the will of Cardinal Zelada to the Chapter Library of the Cathedral at Toledo. The Milan copy itself reveals that it is derived from a Franco-Italian version infinitely superior to Group A. Of this Milan copy E. Denison Rose (11) wrote in 1931; "The original of 'Z' is said to be in Toledo, but Professor Benedetto hus been umble to obtain jany news of it, and until this MS, is forthcoming the Milan copy must be received with a certain amount of caution." However, after several attempts Percival David finally discovered the original MS, on December 7, 1932, in the Chapter Library of the Cathedral at Toledo. According to Moule on this MS, was made in Italy about the year 1470. As the Milan copy, though generally faithful. contains many small and some important mistakes, the rediscovery of the original should be a matter for congratulation to every student of the Polian texts. More fortunately, this valuable MS, was very faithfully and carefully edited by A. C. Moule, and published in 1938 as the second volume of Moreo Pole:

the Description of the World. Since many unknown Polian treasures may still lie in European libraries wrongly catalogued or not catalogued at all, as Penzer imagines (19), when scholars and bibliographers pass over even fully recorded MSS., we may expect that more hitherto unknown MSS, will turn up and shed further light on the problems of the Polian texts.

Having reviwed briefly the textual history of the Book of Marco Polo, let us now give a glance at some important modern printed editions. The four outstanding editions of the nineteenth century are the Geographic Text (1814), the translations by Marsden (1818), Pauthier (1865) and Henry Yule (1871), to the former two of which I have already referred. Pauthier used certain MSS, of the Gregoire version, Group A. as the basis for his modern French translation. because he placed great, perhaps too great importance, upon the carious Note of one Thibault de Cepoy in his "A" type MSS. This Thibault de Cepny was a captain in the service of Philip the Fair, and later entered the service of Charles de Valois, Philip's brother, who sent him to Constaminople on a political mission. Thibault left Paris on September 9, 1309. and proceeded to Venice, where he concluded a treaty of alliance in December, 1306. During his stay there he met Marco Polo and in August 1307 was presented by Marco Polo himself a copy of his book, inscribed as "the first copy of his said Book after he made the same." After Thibault's death his son Jezn made a copy of the book, which he gave to Charles de Valois, and he also made other copies for these of his friends who asked for them. This is the story told in the Note, to which Pauthier attached such great importance, but which has long since been proved to be quite unreliable.

Yule's famous edition was based on Pauthier's. Yule, who had already entertained some doubts as to the authenticity of Thibault de Cepoy's Note, adopted, neverthless, Pauthier's edition in preference to fr. 1116 the importance of which he was well aware. He pointed out the awkwardness and tautologies appearing in fr. 1116, but this can hardly be a sufficient justification for chosing an apparently inferior text as the basis of his franslation. Our explanation is that, although Yule was a commentator and a great commentator, he was not a bibliographer, nor a philologist nor a paleographer. Yule's cyclopaedic edition considerably augmented by Henri Cordier was reprinted and has acquired a very wide acceptance not only by scholars but by the general public.

Previous to 1928 there was almost nothing to be added to the great Yule-Cordier edition in three volumes. In 1928 Luigi Foscolo Bendetto's volumnious edition Marro Polo: Il Millors made its appearance in Florence. In his lengthy introduction Benedetto classified the numerous Polian texts, and arranged them into the families to which they respectively belong. He has not only increased the Yule-Cordier list of MSS, from 78 to 128, but has discovered a copy of extreme importance, the Milan copy of Z. which has been already referred to. The second half of his book contains the carefully edited text of the most famous MS., fr. 1116, with copious textual notes and important passages in foot-notes taken from other sources. After the publication of his fine edition. Benedetto prepared in Italian translation of fr. 1116, embodying in it the most important additional passages from other texts. This modern Italian edition was translated into English by Aldo Ricci and published in 1931 with an introduction by Denison Ross.

Another impotant edition was a reprint published in 1929 of John Frampton's Elizabethan translation with a lengthy introduction and copious appenditions by Penzer. A second edition, enlarged, appeared in 1937.

In 1938 the first two volumes of Moreo Polo: Description of the World by A. C. Moule and Paul Pelliot were published in London. The first volume contains Moule's voluminous composite translation. The version of Ramusio and the modern Italian edition of Benedetto (and its English translation by Ricci) are also composite texts, but different from Moule's version. The former two are based on some basic texts (Ramusio's on Pipino's Latin, and Benedetto's on fr. 1116), and embody important passages from other texts without indicating their sources. Hence the passages of the basic texts are indistinguishable from those taken from other sources. In Moule's version fr. 1116 is translated completely and literally, and printed in ordinary type, while translated words, phrases, sentences and passages from other sources are inserted in their supposedly proper places, and printed in Italies with marginal indications as to their sources. The undeniable defect of Moule's version is its awloward and difficult, if not unintelligible, style which is the inevitable result of such a kind of composite text. It appears to me that Moule's reconstruction is based on the theory that there was only one original version. and that, consequently, it is possible to knit the words, phrases, sentences, and passages of all extant texts into one whole complete text. There seems to be two methods for the purpose of reconstructing the Book of Mario Polo: one is that of preparing a composite text followed by Ramusio. Benedetto in his modern Italian version (Ricci's English translation), and Moule in his first volume of Marco Polo; the other is that of reproducing the more important texts as in the case of d'Avezac's (Geographic text) and Benedetto's edition of fr. 1116, Penzer's edition of Framption's translation, and Moule's edition of the Zelada text in his second volume of Marco Polo.
